

DUNDEE - Leuchars Air Show

Aviation at Leuchars dates back to 1911. Like so many RAF stations, the airfield itself owes its existence to the war years. Leuchars was intended as a training unit, being termed a 'Temporary Mobilisation Station' taking aircrew from initial flying training through to fleet co-operation work. Building was still underway when the Armistice was signed in 1918. Most was made of Leuchars' maritime location when it was designated a Naval Fleet Training School, eventually to undertake the training of 'naval spotting' crews who acted as eyes for the Royal Navy's capital ships.

The unit was formally named 'Royal Air Force Leuchars' in March 1920, In 1935 Leuchars became home to Number 1 Flying Training School (No 1 FTS)

Leuchars remained an active Station to the end of the War, concentrating on anti-submarine and anti-shipping strikes. With the contraction of the Air Force in peace-time.
